urp them.
The gentleman from Virginia indeed admits that if the envoy went to invite war instead of securing peace, it would be highly criminal; and in this admission he has given the death blow to his own principle. For when the envoy goes for the ostensible purpose of securing peace, how are we to be assured that the real, though secret purpose is not to invite war? War may happen to suit a faction better than peace; and in that case they would send to invite or to strengthen it: but they would never avow this project. It would be too odious. Therefore the mission would be covered under the plausible pretext of securing peace.
